

Concept: Beggar Monk. Culture: Lhobanese.

This character is Literate.

Attributes: Agility d6, Smarts d6, Spirit d8, Strength d6, Vigor d8

Skills: Fighting d8, Enlightenment d8, Healing d6, Knowledge (Religion) d6,

Notice d6, Persuasion d4, Stealth d6, Survival d4. Charisma: +0; Pace: 6; Parry: 6; Toughness: 6 (1)

Edges: Arcane Background (Enlightenment), Martial Artist, Monk (Militant), New Power.

Hindrances: One Arm, Habit (Drinking – Minor), Lost the Way (Minor), Poverty.

Powers [15 PP]: Boost trait (memories of past lives), smite (ghostly arm appears in place of the missing one)

Gear: Metal prayer beads (count as Iron Fists, +1 Dmg unarmed) tattered warrior-monk's robes (+1), bottle of cheap wine, Lotus concoction of healing (Azure Dust of Relief).

Background: One Arm had a name, a long time ago, but it isn't important anymore. He was one of the most promising students in a monastery in eastern Lhoban. When the head of the monastery assigned him as Chela to the famous Lo Sai, a feared demon huntress, One Arm's heart leapt. Finally, his skills would really be tested.

What One Arm didn't know, was that Lo Sai was on her way to the dreaded city of Collana, in Ekul, where the monks keep at bay the terrible entities unleashed by the Valk during the war.

Lo Sai took up residence on a pillar just outside the city, and kept staring toward the city, exerting the power of her spirit to keep the demons locked inside. One Arm's task was to provide for her needs: finding water and food, and sleeping at the base of the pillar during the terrible nights when the demons tried to break out of Collana, blocked only by the sheer will of the monks. But that was a very ford task: one night, a scaly creature vomited from some hell manager to break through the barrier and went to Lo Sai's pillar, where she was lying unconscious from fatigue.

One Arm tried to defend his mistress, but the cast demon ripped his arm away and threw him aside, like a broken doll. Then darkness mercifully fell upon One Arm. When he woke up in a first dawn, his mistress' body lay near him, destroyed and desters as in every possible way. That day something broke in the young Chela's and, an injury even worse than his mutilation. Fear? Desperation? Or simply acceptance that mankind can't oppose the evil which comes from other worlds? One Arm left his brotherhood and renounced his name, becoming nothing more than a wandering beggar of the Dominions, his only consolation the bottle of spirits at his side.

But there is an ancient saying in Lhoban: "A man is only lost until he finds himself."

Only time will show if that is true.

Concept: Former Corsair and Poet.

Culture: Caldeian.

This character is Literate.

Attributes: Agility d8, Smarts d6, Spirit d6, Strength d8, Vigor d6

Skills: Boating d6, Climbing d4, Fighting d10, Knowledge (Legends and Lore)

d8, Notice d6, Swimming d4, Taunt d6.

Charisma: +0; Pace: 6; Parry: 8; Toughness: 6(1)

Edges: Corsair Fencer, Counterattack, Poet, Quick

Hindrances: Carouser, Overconfident, Sharp-Tongued

Gear: Iron long sword (Str+d8), bronze dagger (Str+d4, Range: 3/6/12), light leather armor (+1), book of poetry, 200 Moons.

Background: Vandero is the minor son of an important Caldeian noble. A reckless soul and a lashing tongue since his youth, his father had him enlisted in the Corsairs to instill some discipline in him, taking him away from his beloved books of poetry and from the intrigues of the capital.

Enlisted with him was his childhood friend Aros, his constant companion in mischief.

Unsurprisingly, Vandero didn't cope well with the discipline of the Corsairs, and only the importance of his family and his skill with the blade allowed him to keep a place in the crew of the Dusk Hammer.

Vandero's fellow Corsairs didn't really understand the tall fellow who loved to read books of poetry in his spare time and had a tongue as sharp as his blade: he made a lot of enemies and no friends. He survived his first months in the Corsairs only thanks to Aros watching his back.

The Dusk Hammer's captain, Tovar Kask, didn't like Vander all, and put him in charge of the ship's boarders, secretly hoping which be killed.

But that didn't happen and a silent, reciprocal hate grew by you the two. It was with the boarding of the Kalatryia, a Faberterran hip, that things changed forever: aboard, among rich silks and gold statue. Va dero found Valeria, a princess destined for a foreign marriage.

Vandero had known many women in his life, by twen his eyes met Valeria's, well... he was lost.

But someone saw what passed in Vandero's har. Captain Tovar. With a display of malignity, he took the giples has share of the loot, and nobody could contest it.

Vandero's heart crumpled, that night, hearing the girl crying in Tovar's cabin.

The night after that the Dusk Hammer passed near Hillias' coast, and Vandero enacted a desperate plan: he sneaked into Tovar's cabin, freed Valeria and headed for the bridge, where Aros was waiting for them with a boat.

But Tovar Kask and the rest of the crew were waiting for them: it was a trap.

"Today, even your father's name could not save you, traitor!" he swore, and unsheathed his iron.

Blades flashed and blood was spilled before Vandero and Valeria managed to reach the boat, but Aros took a sword in the heart meant for Vandero, and died on the deck, while Tovar Kask laughed evilly.

With a snake-like strike, Vandero slashed away his former captain's eye and prepared to kill him.

Nobody knows how that duel would have ended, because at that moment, the ropes holding the boat broke free and the vessel fell into the sea, with Vandero and Valeria aboard.

The current carried them away while on the deck of the Kalatryia Tovar Kask shouted: "Vandero, hear my words! I'll kill you! I'll kill you, dog!"

Vandero is alone now: Valeria died of a fever six months after he saved her, and those days, although bittersweet because of the constant memory of Aros's demise, were the best ones of Vandero's life.

